Update

The Government has launched its call for evidence to help shape and promote the future of the aviation industry both up to 2050 and beyond. The consultation document sets out the Government's overall aims and approach and seeks views on its proposed approach and the issues that the Government would like to explore through the development of the strategy.

These are 6 objectives the Government has set out for a new aviation strategy:

- Help the aviation industry work for its customers
- Ensure a safe and secure way to travel
- Build a global and connected Britain
- Encourage competitive markets
- Support growth while tackling environmental impacts
- Develop innovation, technology and skills

This call for evidence is the first stage of developing a new aviation strategy for the UK. The phased process is set out on pages 23-24 of the consultation document and you will note that there will be a series of discussion papers over the next few months leading up to the publication of a new aviation strategy at the end of 2018.

Deadline is 13th October to respond by.
